Mind by Bailey White is a hilarious memoir about her wacky family. One of the best qualities about the book is the way Bailey White paints the pictures of Mama. You can just see her sitting in her reclining chair, listening to the radio, and reading UFO newsletter or picking up some road kill for dinner.

MAMA MAKES UP HER MIND is a collection of very short essays of the type White and other essayists have
popularized on national public radio: most run
two to three pages,
and I don't believe the longest piece ran more than five pages at most.

Once at my aunts
house we were greeted by her. She was always pretty but she was very boring! My mom got back into her car and drove off. My aunt said,
"Don't worry me and
my baby will have a lot of fun"! I didn't understand why she called me baby but I
shrugged it off and walked inside.

"Stand up and unbutton me," I tell him, turning my back toward him. I've seen my mom do this a million times. But the only thing I have to unbutton is the top of my skirt. He does it, and then he unzips it, and the skirt falls while he slips his hands under my turtleneck, and lifts it over my head. I turn around in my bra and underwear
